Global tensions escalate amid Iran, Ukraine, and cartel violence

February 24, 2026, marks a day of heightened geopolitical volatility, with multiple flashpoints converging. The U.S. has deployed its largest military force to the Middle East since 2003, coinciding with Secretary of State Marco Rubio’s rare briefing to lawmakers on Iran (C1-E2). This buildup occurs as student protests in Iran intensify, prompting armed police to flood campuses (C1-E40), while Tehran stresses 'red lines' (C1-E38). Simultaneously, the Russia-Ukraine war enters its fifth year, with European leaders visiting Kyiv to reaffirm support (C1-E6, C1-E37) and President Zelenskyy pressing for EU accession by 2027 (C1-E33). Ukraine is also appealing to China to play a 'critical' role in peace efforts (C1-E54). In Latin America, Mexico faces internal instability following the killing of cartel leader 'El Mencho,' which triggered widespread violence and a prison break of 23 inmates (C1-E5, C1-E56); President Sheinbaum insists World Cup security remains intact (C1-E35). Meanwhile, Trump’s State of the Union address looms amid tariff escalations (C1-E41), Iran tensions (C1-E20), and revelations that the DOJ withheld Epstein-related files involving Trump (C1-E52). On the economic front, Hong Kong prepares its 2026–27 budget (C1-E9) while advancing tokenised assets and AI chip development (C1-E53, C1-E24). Brazil grapples with deadly floods killing at least 25 (C1-E16), and Sudan’s Rapid Support Forces launched a lethal assault in Darfur

(C1-E17). These developments underscore a world where regional crises increasingly intersect with great-power competition and domestic instability.
