Daily Executive Summary

Global tensions escalate amid Iran, Ukraine, and cartel violence

As the U.S. marks four years since Russia's full-scale invasion of Ukraine, President Trump prepares to deliver a State of the Union address amid heightened geopolitical tensions, particularly with Iran. Secretary of State Marco Rubio briefed top lawmakers on Iran following the deployment of the largest U.S. military force to the Middle East since 2003, while student protests in Iranian universities have triggered a heavy-handed security response. Simultaneously, Ukraine continues its diplomatic push for EU accession by 2027 and appeals to China to play a 'critical' role in peace efforts. In Latin America, Mexico faces internal instability after the killing of cartel leader 'El Mencho,' which sparked widespread violence and a prison break of 23 inmates, prompting concerns over World Cup security. Meanwhile, Brazil grapples with deadly floods that have killed at least 25 people and left dozens missing. On the economic front, Trump's new 10% global tariffs have reignited trade war concerns, while the EU's trade chief criticizes the bloc's slow response to China's aggressive export policies. In Hong Kong, authorities are balancing financial innovation—such as tokenised assets and AI chip breakthroughs—with regulatory enforcement, including freezing assets of insider traders who fled overseas. Additional developments include Canada's inquiry into OpenAI following a mass shooting, and growing international attention to victims of Southeast Asia's cyber-scam farms. Despite these crises, ceremonial and cultural events—from Modi’s visit to Israel to the Louvre director’s resignation after a jewel heist—underscore the complex interplay of diplomacy, security, and institutional accountability shaping the global landscape.
